

Green Mountain Builders Completes Remodel in Bonita Bay

May 26, 2020

Green Mountain Builders has just announced the completion of a beautiful remodel of a luxury home kitchen in Bonita Bay, Bonita Springs, Florida. The transitional-inspired style makeover provides a transformed kitchen and family room open concept space. This was accomplished by removing interior walls effecting easier flow from one room to another.

It created an exquisite space. The kitchen features an expansive, granite-surfaced island that comfortably accommodates six, enhanced with wainscoting to provide a clean, finished appearance. This transitional remodel includes wide plank, brushed oak flooring that transitions smoothly from the kitchen and breakfast nook to the family room. In addition, the kitchen offers ten-foot-high, wide-style, Shaker perimeter cabinets, quartz perimeter countertops, a porcelain tile backsplash and custom lighting. Appliances include a Bosch convection oven and microwave, gas cooktop and stainless steel column refrigerator/freezer.

A transitional kitchen borrows elements from or references styles of the past and combines them with contemporary features to produce something new and fresh. The beauty of this type of kitchen is that a homeowner can decide how you want to mix and match the past and the present, so that the design expresses who the homeowners are and how they live! Transitional designs are somewhere in between traditional and modern styles; they bridge the gap between the two, borrowing from each aesthetic. It yields an environment that is warm, welcoming, and unfussy but incorporates classic components. Most kitchen remodels could be described as transitional. Some read very modern, others more traditional—yet they are all totally different from each other.

In kitchen remodeling, a frequent, homeowner initial request involves wall removal, as did Mr and Mrs. Young with their Bonita Bay remodel. The ever popular open concept is here to stay, as homeowners tend to prefer wide open spaces to closed-off rooms. Interior walls prevent people from being together. They function as a separation, a block to something unwanted or a means to isolate gathering areas. Of course, walls are great if you want privacy in a bedroom or bathroom but are neither necessary nor ideal in common areas where families and friends come together. Eliminating barriers in a home allows for easier flow of communication, as well as more open spaces. For example, one parent is cooking dinner in the kitchen, the kids are doing homework in the dining room and the other parent is sitting on the couch watching television, all in separate rooms. It is thus impossible for the family to be together throughout the busy night. If those partition walls were eliminated, the whole family could discuss their day and the kids could easily ask for homework assistance.

Simply removing non-structural walls or a doorway can establish the sense of flow that your home is missing, allowing it to feel roomier and less cluttered. Another amazing benefit is the natural light that can finally shine throughout the entire home. Is it time to consider a new, open, floor plan? Listening to our clients, we have devised creative ways to make a home feel spacious and conducive to the family's lifestyle. Merely by eliminating walls, we can bring the family together and simultaneously maintain the integrity of the home. "There are so many decisions when you renovate. The best choice, for us, was to contract with Green Mountain Builders. We were not easy clients, as there were many moving parts. Green Mountain Builders were patient, informed, and professional. During the process, we received daily updates; we always knew the next step. Our questions were addressed in a timely manner and respectfully. In addition, as we were nearing completion, our manager noticed issues that we would have missed. Any idea or issue was considered, addressed and resolved. Our Construction Manager, Bill Colborn, was responsive, kind and accommodating. Through every step of the process, we were made aware of the cost, helping us maintaining our budget. We are so happy with our initial decision to trust GMB."
